2008 New Orleans Jazz Festivals

French Quarter Fest

"The Pfister Sisters are exactly what music SHOULD be...they bring joy to your soul, harmony to your ears, and the best and biggest boogie-woogie to your feet. No part of you can stand still when they start singing! Run, do not walk, to hear them whenever you can! "

Amanda McBroom - (singer/ songwriter/ composer of Bette Midler's hit song The Rose – www.amcbroom.com), who saw the Pfister Sisters perform at the 2008 French Quarter Fest

Jazz and Heritage Festival

" Another song, performed on stage by an all-women's swing group, the Pfister Sisters, did not go unnoticed. It sums up the mood of the city while it collectively crosses its fingers and waits for its levees to be repaired – River Stay Away From My Door."

BBC News, May 6, 2008

"Get into That New Orleans Groove at home. Can't get to the New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival? Create your own. . . 2 dozen current discs by a diverse cross section of regional favorites playing this year's fest: The Pfister Sisters, Puttin' It On. Yvette Voelker, Debbie Davis and Holley Bendtsen re-create the jazz harmony vocals popularized by the Boswell Sisters during the New Orleans swing era of the 1920's and 30's."

USA Today, May 2, 2008

"Fans, slick with sunscreen, stretched out in front of stages or set up chairs in the shade of massive oak trees and enjoyed music from groups as diverse as Santana, The Radiators, The Pfister Sisters and Snooks Eaglin.

Mary Foster, Associated Press, May 5, 2008

"If any group could ever represent the sweetness and slightly naughty nature of New Orleans's fairer sex, it would, no doubt, be the Pfister Sisters."
